

Summer Concerts In Wisconsin

Ella Vandenberg | Staff Writer

Although summer still feels far away, it is only a matter of time before the air gets warmer and the days get longer. This means not only more time in the fresh air, but also the return of outdoor concerts. The past couple of years Wisconsin has become a hub for summer musical performances and this year is likely to continue the trend.

The big ticket event, year after year, is Milwaukee's Summerfest. This festival draws in people from across the country for its three-weekend long, jam-packed event. What is unique about Summerfest is that it has a mix of festival shows and formal concerts. Attendees can buy general admission tickets to see all of the performers on the festival stages or attempt to get tickets to the more exclusive shows. Many of the headliners have already been announced, giving fans something to look forward to. Some of this year's biggest names include The Lumineers, Benson Boone, and Hozier.

The popularity of Summerfest has radiated into the live music scene across the state of Wisconsin. This summer, for the first time in over two decades, Camp Randall Stadium will open its doors back up to performers. The two headliners of the season will be Morgan Wallen and Coldplay.

Beyond these big ticket events are many other growing festivals and concert venues. Throughout Wisconsin, concert-goers can attend shows at Alpine Valley, Somerset Amphitheater, and various other locations home to outdoor musical festivals. Year after year Wisconsin is growing in its musical offerings, quickly becoming a prime concert destination for fans of all types of music.
